Costly thy habit,
As thy purse can buy.
Shakespeare.

Thus did Polonius, the Lord Chamberlain impress upon his son Laertes the need for living within his means,—the wisdom of so choosing his adornments as to keep his expenditure within the limits of his purse. Advice of this nature, though, is more easily proffered than followed, but it is the more easily followed when a wise discrimination plays a leading part in the making of one's choice.

Therefore choose wisely; you must spend, but you can save as you spend, if you spend where the greatest value is offered for the least outlay.
